

Sildenafil, Oslo District Court (Oslo tingrett), 3 August 2011

Kluwer Patent Blog
November 20, 2011

Lars Erik Steinkjer (Wikborg Rein)

Please refer to this post as: Lars Erik Steinkjer, 'Sildenafil, Oslo District Court (Oslo tingrett), 3 August 2011', Kluwer Patent Blog, November 20, 2011, <http://patentblog.kluweriplaw.com/2011/11/20/sildenafil-oslo-district-court-oslo-tingrett-3-august-2011/>

---

The Court held that Pfizer's Norwegian patent for use of sildenafil (a PDE 5 inhibitor) for treatment of erectile dysfunction was inventive. Although the court did not consider it inventive to test PDE V inhibitors for the treatment of erectile dysfunction as such, it held that the skilled person in so testing was confronted with an extensive testing task. Hence, the court found that the skilled person would not arrive at the claimed solution with a reasonable expectation of success within the available time window, i.e. the time period from publication of the relevant prior art to the priority date of the patent without inventive activity. Click here for the full text of this case. A summary of this case will be posted on <http://www.KluwerIPCases.com>.