I expect Germany to ratify the Protocol in the near future. When the last additional ratifications that we received are completed the Protocol will enter into force, so the preparatory phase of the UPC Agreement will start.

Germany will be asked to deposit the ratification instruments for the UPC Agreement until the German Constitutional Court has given a decision. I am confident that the preparations that need to be done during the Provisional Application Period (PAP) are considerable. They will involve the most important substantive work that needs to be done before the Protocol enters into force and the Court can function in accordance with Article 79.

In order for the PPA to start, one or more member states will have to ratify or give their support to the Protocol. While member states are not relying on any of the member states have ratified the Protocol yet, I am hopeful that the Protocol will enter into force.

I hope that the four states that are necessary for the Protocol to enter into force will ratified or give their support to the Protocol. The four states that are necessary for the Protocol to enter into force will do so, so the preparatory phase of the Protocol will start.

The Preparatory Committee expects the UPC to open its doors in the middle of next year. I expect Germany to ratify the Protocol in the near future. When the last additional ratifications that we received are completed the Protocol will enter into force, so the preparatory phase of the UPC Agreement will start.

Germany will be asked to deposit the ratification instruments for the UPC Agreement until the German Constitutional Court has given a decision. I am confident that the preparations that need to be done during the Provisional Application Period (PAP) are considerable. They will involve the most important substantive work that needs to be done before the Protocol enters into force and the Court can function in accordance with Article 79.

In order for the PPA to start, one or more member states will have to ratify or give their support to the Protocol. While member states are not relying on any of the member states have ratified the Protocol yet, I am hopeful that the Protocol will enter into force.

I hope that the four states that are necessary for the Protocol to enter into force will ratified or give their support to the Protocol. The four states that are necessary for the Protocol to enter into force will do so, so the preparatory phase of the Protocol will start.

The Preparatory Committee expects the UPC to open its doors in the middle of next year. I expect Germany to ratify the Protocol in the near future. When the last additional ratifications that we received are completed the Protocol will enter into force, so the preparatory phase of the UPC Agreement will start.

Germany will be asked to deposit the ratification instruments for the UPC Agreement until the German Constitutional Court has given a decision. I am confident that the preparations that need to be done during the Provisional Application Period (PAP) are considerable. They will involve the most important substantive work that needs to be done before the Protocol enters into force and the Court can function in accordance with Article 79.

In order for the PPA to start, one or more member states will have to ratify or give their support to the Protocol. While member states are not relying on any of the member states have ratified the Protocol yet, I am hopeful that the Protocol will enter into force.

I hope that the four states that are necessary for the Protocol to enter into force will ratified or give their support to the Protocol. The four states that are necessary for the Protocol to enter into force will do so, so the preparatory phase of the Protocol will start.