Gelomyrtol, Federal Court of Justice (Bundesgerichtshof), 23 October 2012

Katrin Gutmiedl (Hoffmann Eitle) · Friday, March 22nd, 2013

A composition obtainable on the market is at least not then novel if the composition can be analyzed and reproduced by a skilled person without undue burden. For this purpose, it is sufficient for a complex composition that is not easily identifiable, if the skilled person can establish a manageable number of hypotheses on the potential composition, one of which could then be confirmed with the available analysis tools. A unique outcome that excludes any other conceivable composition is not required.
