Poland: Bolar Exemption, Supreme Court 23 October 2013

Krystyna Szczepanowska-Kozłowska (Allen & Overy) · Thursday, May 8th, 2014

The Bolar exemption must be interpreted narrowly in order not to affect the patent holder's exclusive rights. The privilege of the generic drug manufacturers who are allowed to conduct clinical trials in order to seek regulatory approval for their therapeutic products based on patented inventions does not apply to their third-party suppliers. Thus, manufacturing of patented pharmaceutical ingredients and offering them to generic drug companies constitutes patent infringement.
