Patent case: Judgment of the Supreme Court of Poland

Krystyna Szczepanowska-Kozłowska (Allen & Overy) · Thursday, December 27th, 2018

The judgment addresses the question of the scope of the co-inventors' right to obtain a patent, prior to the grant of the patent. The Supreme Court presented the view that the substance of the co-inventors' right to a patent allows them to use the invention in an unlimited way and, consequently, obliges them to settle any profits gained from the use of the invention between one another, even before the patent is granted. This is a landmark decision because it states that the substance of the right to a patent constitutes the expectancy of the rights resulting from a patent.

Case date: 11 February 2016

Case number: V CSK 331/15

Court: Supreme Court of Poland
